1. AD-AWARE SE PERSONAL EDITION

When you're surfing the Net, various devious companies will plant advertising and tracking files in your computer to monitor what you're up to. Many reviewers say Ad-Aware is the best for scanning your system and clearing it of these rogue files, allowing you more privacy on the internet. This program is able to scan every last bit of your machine, including the RAM and the registry, and is one of the most popular freebies on the Net with more than 200 million downloads worldwide.

2. ZONEALARM

This programme has four features to protect your broadband connection from hackers. It has a firewall that acts like a door to your computer, where you can let in only the traffic you want.

The Internet Lock blocks internet traffic while your computer is unattended and the Application Control lets you decide which programmes are allowed access to the net. Zones let you monitor all broadband activity, making this an excellent addition to the security of your PC.

3 CCLEANER

This tool will sweep clean your PC of rubbish, allowing it to run faster and more efficiently. It does this by removing unused and temporary files from your system, giving you more hard-disk space, and it even checks your registry. You will be surprised at how much junk can accumulate on your machine, and as far as free programmes go, this is the best one to give yours a well-deserved spring clean. We'll let you guess what the first C in CCleaner stands for.

4. AVAST HOME EDITION

Many critics say this hugely popular anti-virus software is just as effective as the big guns Norton and McAfee, which will each set you back Pounds 50. Its easy interface allows you to choose what part of your computer you want to scan and it will also check your emails for viruses. It can detect if any hackers try to get into your PC and also protects you when using file-sharing programmes like Kazza. Free updates are available as and when new threats are identified.

5. IRFAN VIEW

Considering the huge costs of picture-editing software - the bare basic version of Adobe Photoshop is still Pounds 60 - Irfan View provides an excellent alternative. The program lets you open and edit images, as well as multiple media formats. You can cut and crop images, apply batch conversions, add, sharpen or blur effects, create panoramas, and change colour modes easily. It offers all of the features most home users could ever need - and, of course, it's completely free.

6. WORDWEB

If you haven't got Microsoft Word and need a dictionary and thesaurus on your computer, then you'll be pleased to know there is one available for free. WordWeb can be used to look up words from almost any program. In addition to displaying definitions and synonyms, WordWeb can also find sets of related words. The database has more than 150,000 root words and 118,000 synonym sets, and provides a handy way of looking up spellings without going online.

8. JETAUDIO BASIC

Not only does this program play various music and video files, it also has features such as CD burning, recording, and conversion to other file formats.

You can also create your own internet broadcast by using JetCast, included within the software. Sound files can be edited with effects like wide, reverb, and x-bass, the speed of playback can be altered and there is a cross-fading function for wannabe DJs. It can also search for lyrics for the songs you're playing.

9. GOOGLE EARTH This amazing tool puts a planet's worth of imagery and maps right on your desktop. Zoom in on satellite images of anywhere on the planet and look up points of interests like restaurants, hospitals, and schools. You can fly from space right into your neighbourhood and get driving directions, tilt and rotate views to see 3D terrain and buildings and add your own annotations. It is a demanding program though, and PCs older than four years may not be able to handle it very well.
